Medill Professors

Owen Youngman & Jeremy Gilbert

Introductions

Owen Youngman became Knight Professor of Digital Media Strategy at Medill in 2009. As the Chicago Tribune's first director of interactive media, he created such Web sites as metromix.com and chicagotribune.com. As a senior VP, he launched RedEye and Triblocal; acquired Chicago magazine; and oversaw such businesses as Hoy and CLTV News.

Jeremy Gilbert teaches about Media Product Design for Medill and the Segal Design Institute. As the Poynter Institute's Managing editor for Innovation he redesigned Poynter Online. As the sports design director for the St. Petersburg Times he helped paginate and redesign Florida's best daily newspaper. He also worked at another newspaper in Florida and a pair of web startups.

Innovation:

- We need new ways to solve old problems
- We need any way to solve a new problem
- We need new products to serve old markets better (and perform their "jobs," not ours)
- We need many products to serve emerging markets for the first time
- We need to create tools to improve not just our products, but also our processes

Innovation:
The Journalist Replies, I Can!

- We need new ways to solve old problems
- We need any way to solve a new problem
- We need new products to serve old markets better (and perform their "jobs," not ours)
- We need many products to serve emerging markets for the first time
- We need to create tools to improve not just our products, but also our processes

What is the Center?

- A model of innovation that combines the reach and leverage of technology with the goals and editorial judgment of journalism
- A place where journalists and technologists
  - Learn to communicate across disciplines
  - Learn to recognize the limitations and exploit opportunities in each medium
  - Invent new story forms and technologies that create valuable experiences for audiences, communities, and practitioners

Attorney says Rihanna will appear in court
LOS ANGELES - Rihanna's attorney says the singer will appear at a hearing next month as a possible witness in the assault case against Chris Brown.
Donald Etra says prosecutors have told him Rihanna will receive a subpoena to testify at a preliminary hearing June 22. The hearing will focus on whether there is enough evidence to continue the case against Brown.

Settle on a Pedal

ARTICLE & PHOTOS
Cat Rabenstine

Summer is here and the streets are busy. Biking in and around the city will save time and money and finding the right bike pedal will ensure comfort while navigating the city. Avid biker Korie Lazdowsky of Bucktown says biking is "faster, easier and healthier" than taking public transportation or driving. "It's liberating to move on your own terms."

Her Choice: A plastic platform pedal.
Her Reason: They're light and it doesn't hurt as much if the pedal hits [illegible]
Her Style: She tears through Chicago in a skirt and high heels.

TIPS:

"If you're going to be boppin' around town, get some stiff [platform] pedals."
Paul McNamara,
On The Route Bicycles

"Platforms with little spikes on it work with boots in the winter."
Anthony Mikrut,
Village Cycle Center

"I encourage people to experiment and find their groove."
Jarod Welz,
Rapid Transit Cycle Shop

"I, myself, use the speed plate, a platform pedal with a concave shape to it so your foot fits in it really well. I think it looks really cool, which is honestly the reason a lot of things end up on bicycles."
Steve Evans,
Village Cycle Center

"There's no shame going into a store green, not knowing what you're looking for."
Jeff Perkins,
Chicago bike messenger for more than five years

PLATFORM

STYLE

Just a block, no bells or whistles.

PERFORMANCE

You can wear all types of shoes, even boots during winter. A larger pedal leaves room for big feet.

Chicago's Water Cooler Talk: Toilets

Three Uncommon Commodes

ARTICLE
Reese Ruiz

Everyone poops. It's a fact of life — and also the title of an educational and blunt children's book by Tara Gorr (definitely worth bookmarking for future use). In light of this fact, StreetWise ventured into the city in search of Chicago's most interesting commodes. We've laid out some features of the best of the best for you to consider (you can thank us later).

Boozing & Bathing

The wet bar is the weirdest design element seen in Merchandise Mart's DreamHome 2010 bathroom by William Collins, senior designer for The Kohler Store in Chicago. After seeing another designer's 2007 DreamHome wet bar, Collins said he "wanted to move in." Collins designed the bathroom for a 10-room showcase of elegant designs inspired by Chicago.
The appeal: Drinks. Manroom. 'Nuff said.

Praying for Obedience

Jesus' face is the first thing you see before you plant your butt on a toilet seat painted by Mitch O'Connell, artist at The Tattoo Factory Gallery on North Broadway. It was designed to praise men for putting the seat down — hence Jesus. Another design scolds them for leaving it up with an angry devil. "Toilets will never go out of fashion," O'Connell says. "And you couldn't have a more intimate relationship with your fine art purchase."
The appeal: Pensive hesitation.

A Ballpark Classic

The troughs in the men's rooms at Wrigley Field are non-replaceable. Businesses that currently have troughs can keep and maintain them, but they can't be newly installed, according to the city of Chicago Municipal Code.
The appeal: You're in and out in five seconds, no waits, always room. Is there anything easier in a stadium that holds 40k+ people?

Democrats Barely Pass Vote on H.R.4173 in Senate

By: CCU System

There was some strange behavior in Congress today as several democrats went against their party and voted with Republicans to stall the Democrat sponsored Dodd Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (H.R.4173) bill in the Senate.

At first glance, it seems like many of the rogue voters were actually influenced by their constituencies.

Rep. Chandler [D-KY], and Rep. Skelton [D-MO] might be trying to appear more conservative, as they are more liberal than there respective constituences and are in tight races for their seats in the House.

Also, Rep. Davis [D-TN] is a perfect ideological fit for his constituency but is still in a

Batts home run gives Wildcats late victory over

Updated: Friday, 12 Feb 2010, 1:47 PM CST

TEMPE, Ariz. -- Michelle Batts brought home the go-ahead run to give the #15 Northwestern Wildcats the lead in the fifth inning and the Wildcats beat the Cal-State Northridge Matadors 6-3 on Friday.

Batts drove in two Wildcats (1-0) runners. She went 1-4 at the plate.

Batts homered in the fifth inning scoring Adrienne Monka.

Cal-State Northridge (0-2) was unable to make good contact against Meghan Lamberth. The Matadors managed three hits off of the freshman pitcher. Lamberth allowed no earned runs, no walks and struck out three during her three innings of work.

Jessica Smith got the win for Northwestern. She allowed three runs over four innings. The junior pitcher struck out one, gave up two walks and surrendered three hits.

Cal-State Northridge's Debbie Duran took the loss. She went seven innings, gave up five walks, struck out two, and allowed six runs.

Nicole Pauly and Emily Haug helped lead the Wildcats. They combined for three hits, three runs batted in and two visits to home plate.

LONDON (Reuters) - Oil giant BP Plc launched a plan to repair its battered image in the United States on Tuesday, ditching its gaffe-prone chief executive and promising to slim down by trebling an asset sale target to $30 billion.
However, the company, the target of public anger over its Gulf of Mexico oil spill, tempted further ire by denying it needed cultural change and offsetting the costs of the spill, including expected fines, against its taxes.
BP said Tony Hayward would stand down in October, to be replaced by American Bob Dudley, as it unveiled a $17 billion quarterly loss due to the costs of the biggest oil spill in U.S. history.
"I believe that it is not possible for the company to move on in the United States with me remaining as the face to BP," Hayward told reporters on a conference call.
"So I think that for the good of BP, and particularly for the good of BP in the United States, it is right for me to... step down."
BP Chairman Carl-Henric Svanberg said the company would take a "hard look" at itself in the aftermath of the spill: "BP... will be a different company going forward."

LONDON (Reuters) - Oil giant BP Plc launched a plan to repair its battered image in the United States on Tuesday, ditching its gaffe-prone chief executive and promising to slim down by trebling an asset sale target to $30 billion.

However, the company, the target of public anger over its Gulf of Mexico oil spill, tempted further ire by denying it needed cultural change and offsetting the costs of the spill, including expected fines, against its taxes.

BP said Tony Hayward would stand down in October, to be replaced by American Bob Dudley, as it unveiled a $17 billion quarterly loss due to the costs of the biggest oil spill in U.S. history.

"I believe that it is not possible for the company to move on in the United States with me remaining as the face to BP," Hayward told reporters on a conference call.

"So I think that for the good of BP, and particularly for the good of BP in the United States, it is right for me to... step down."

BP Chairman Carl-Henric Svanberg said the company would take a "hard look" at itself in the aftermath of the spill: "BP... will be a different company going forward."

Before the cap was put in place on July 15, an estimated 25,000 barrels of crude were being skimmed from the massive oil slick closest to the well site daily, according to AFP reports. However, near the end of last week, that number was reportedly down to just 56 barrels. While much of the oil has been burned off or cleaned up already, reclamation workers seem to be having difficulty finding remaining masses of the leaked petroleum.
