After an Australian vessel, Ocean Shield, again detected deep-sea signals consistent with those from an airplane's black box, the official leading a multination search expressed hope Wednesday that crews will begin to find wreckage of a missing Malaysian airliner "within a matter of days."

"I believe we're searching in the right area," Retired Air Chief Marshal Angus Houston said.

All commercial transport aircraft are fitted with underwater locator beacons to assist in the relocation of black box flight data recorders and cockpit voice recorders. These beacons are free-running pingers that transmit signals at an acoustic frequency of 37.5 kilohertz and have an expected battery life of 30 days. The scale of the challenge in locating the black boxes is immense.

The scale of the search for Flight MH370

By Richard Johnson and Denise Lu, Updated: March 18, 2014

The search for Malaysia Airlines Flight MH370 is being compared to a quest for a needle in a haystack. Is it really that tough to find a 210-foot-long plane? You be the judge.

Read the latest updates.

The original search area in the Strait of Malacca, the South China Sea and on land across Malaysia encompassed around 120,000 square nautical miles. In this grid, each square represents one square nautical mile being searched.

So you think you can flop?

Whether it's a dramatic fall, an open-mouth shriek or a prolonged roll on the ground, having the theatrical ability to convince a referee of an opponent's foul play is part of an effective soccer strategy.

We asked a panel of judges to review each of the plays that drew cards in this year's World Cup. Now it's your turn to judge: valid injury, or total fake-out?
