You say you want a (r)Evolution

Understanding how traditional journalism can function in an interactive world.

Goals

- To describe what I believe about multimedia journalism
- To help you know me better
- To take you inside the redesign of Poynter Online as it relates to multimedia journalism

Multimedia journalism

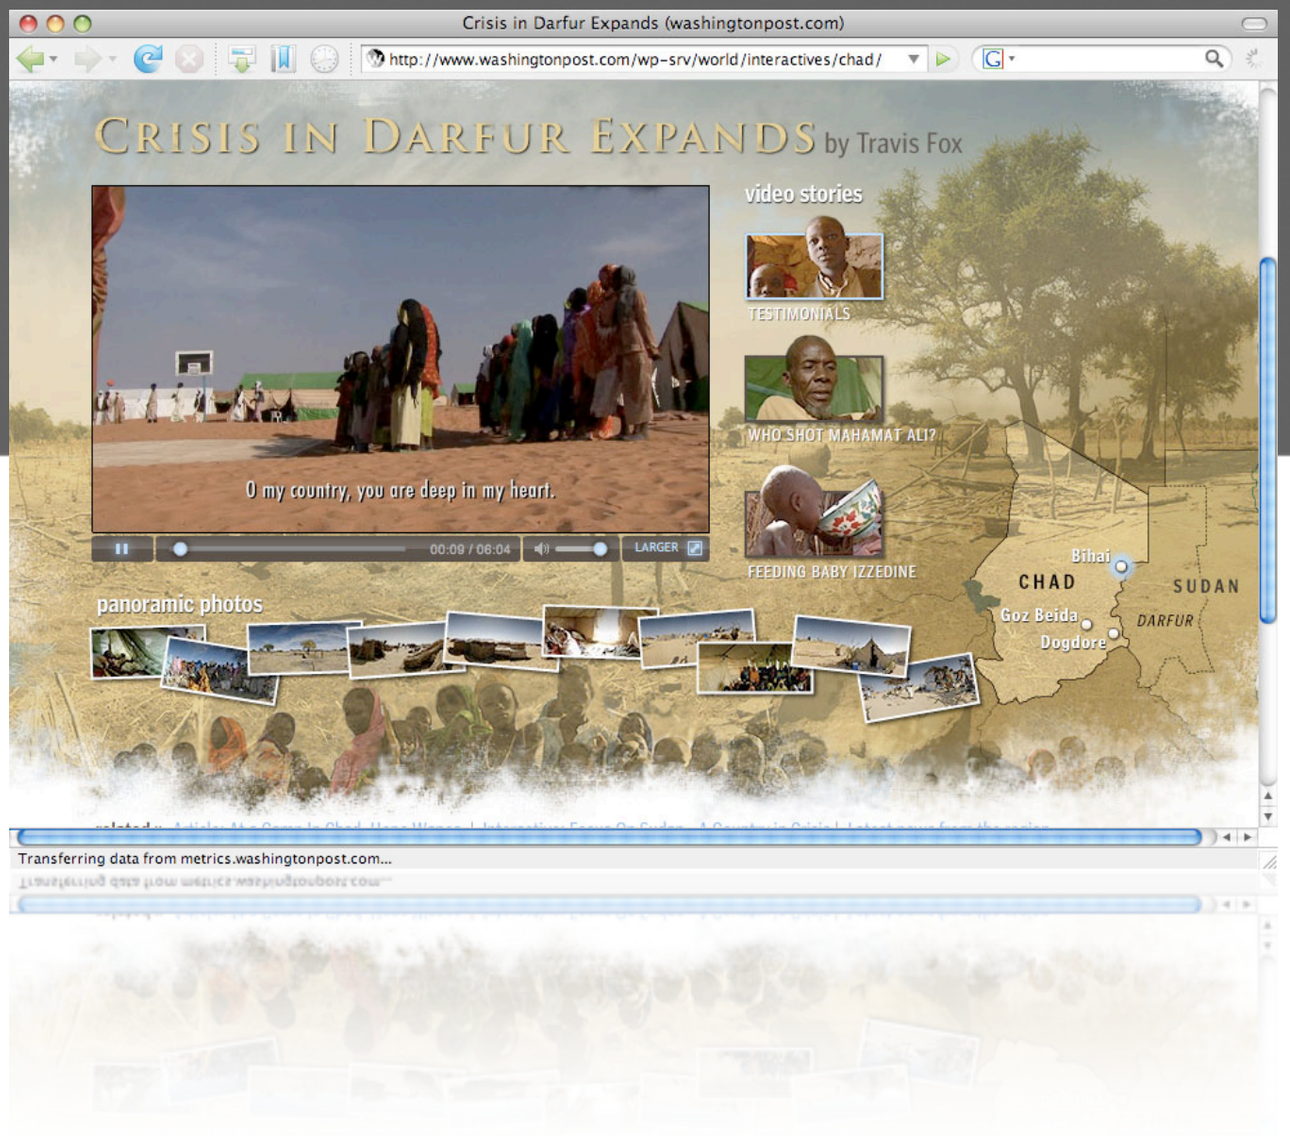

- New ways of telling stories not dependent on a single medium
- Harnessing new technologies as they appear and as they are relevant
- Inviting news consumers to involve themselves and to offer them more choices

How it evolved

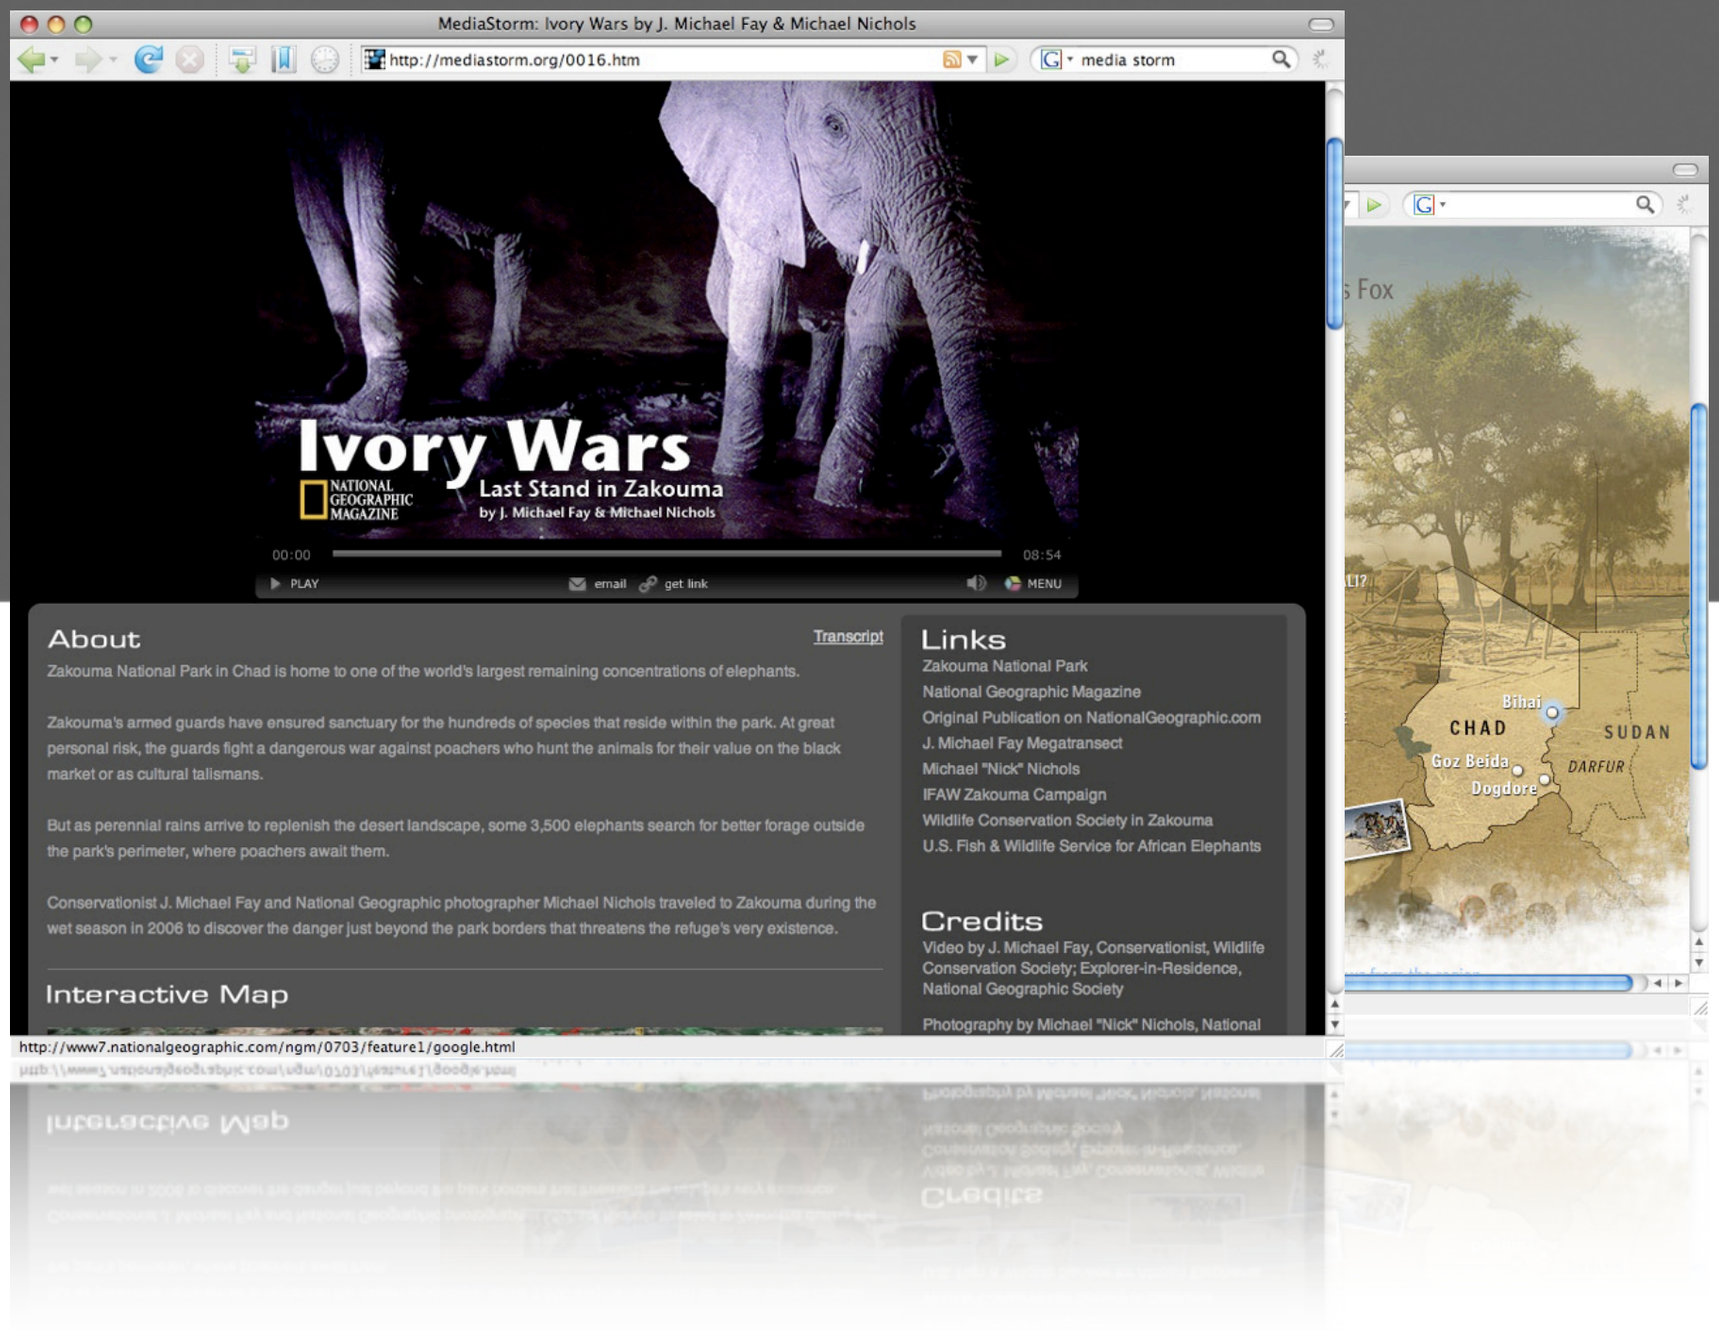

- Computers and modems have powered the growth of multimedia journalism
- A reaction to media consolidation and competition for audience attention
- The gradual understanding that complex stories are best told in different ways

AP to change the way it files, edits and distributes news
The New York Times
It's opening at least four regional editing hubs as part of a plan it calls AP2.0. The news cooperative is also expanding its multimedia packages for entertainment, business and sports reports. Some employees wonder what these changes -- particularly the new regional editing hubs -- will mean for them. "People are definitely jittery," says AP broadcast correspondent Tony Winton.

FBI Warns of Valentine Virus

If you unexpectedly receive a Valentine's Day e-card, be careful. It may not be from a secret admirer, but instead might contain the Storm Worm virus. With the holiday approaching, be on the lookout for spam e-mails spreading the Storm Worm malicious software (malware). The e-mail directs the recipient to click on a link to retrieve the electronic greeting card (e-card)...

A Third of Recent Home Purchases Are "Upside-Down"

Reuters reports: More than 30 percent of U.S. homeowners who bought in the last two years owe more on their mortgage than their house is currently worth, a housing market research company said on Tuesday.

User Involvement

- Personal messaging and connections
- Upload photos and embed video links
- Create blog entries for public topics
- Share industry best practices
- Track journalists' industry moves

What's Next?

How these examples apply to Medill and journalism in general.

Changing Times

- Reading-based journalism on the Web may be a fleeting phase
- On demand video will be more important — broadcast journalism will have to change
- Newsrooms can control the means of production but not distribution
- Even more storytelling tools are available

And for Medill?

- Preach and practice journalism values separate from specific media
- Become an incubator of new journalism ideas and techniques
- Teach students how to learn new technologies, not particular software
- Offer flexible, interdisciplinary courses

Student needs

- Mix of hands-on instruction, industry best practices and theoretical lecture
- Strong ground in journalism history, values and ethics
- Techniques for self-learning
- Individual faculty attention

Any questions?
